

DICKENSON MAKES GREAT PROGRESS

Wonderful Development During County's Thirty-Two Years of Existence.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
Freeling, W. V., October 19.—Dickenson, the hundredth county of the Old Dominion, has made long strides in the improvement of her farming interests, and the development of her wealth of natural resources in the thirty-two years of her existence as a separate county. At the time the county was organized the farms were few and between. Agricultural pursuits represented the more primitive methods of tilling the soil, and by isolation the people were cut off from the markets and marts. The nearest railroad point at that time was Abingdon, more than fifty miles from the center of the county. The public roads were hardly worthy of the name. The forests appeared almost impenetrable to the view. When the county had been organized, many outsiders purchased lands and began to make improvements. The native element caught the inspiration, and the idle lands were made to bring forth the rewards of labor. The fields of corn grace almost every hillside, and the green meadows lend a charm to the valleys. The neat dwellings beautify the land. The whistle of the railroad engine is heard near the borders of the county on all sides, and an extension of the Clinchfield, Carolina and Ohio Corporation's line is being built through the county, from Dante, Russell County, to Elk Horn City, Ky. the distance of thirty-eight miles.

This road will pass within five miles of Clintwood, the capital of the county, which will be the shipping point for the central part of the country, the eastern part shipping from Norfolk, Russell County, on the Norfolk and Western road, while the western part can reach the Chesapeake and Ohio at different points in Kentucky. A bond issue of $54,000 has been voted by the Clintwood magisterial district for road-building. The principal part of this money will be expended in building a high grade road from Clintwood to the nearest point on the new line of railroad.

The railroad operation has given spirit of enterprise to the citizens, and much greater strides will be made in the next five years than has been made in any like period in the history of the county.

Religion and Medicine

S. B. HARTMAN, M. D.

Is there any intimate relation between religion and medicine?

Yes, there is. The old-time healer was also the priest. Theology and medicine have not maintained a separate existence very long. They used to be one. Yes, there is an intimate relation between religion and medicine.

It is well known of a person who eats with thankfulness and ill-natured spirit that his food will not have the same effect as if he were in a kindly mood. The same is true of medicine. If a person swallows a medicine with suspicion, has no faith in its action, is more or less afraid of the one who gives him the medicine, it cannot do him as much good as if he had unwavering faith in it.

The mind has a wonderful influence over the body. Those who believe that a loving Father controls the destiny of mankind are a great deal better prepared to meet the vicissitudes of life and to overcome disease than the one who has no such faith. A truly religious man makes a better patient than an irreligious man.

In using the word religion I am not referring to any particular kind of religion. The Jew and the Gentile, the Catholic and the Protestant, each have a religion in which they believe. They also agree in the essentials.

A religious man may believe that it is necessary for him to use every means in his power to get well. He may believe that it is perfectly proper for him to employ doctors and take medicines. But he also believes that when he has done the best he can there is a higher power that has charge of his affairs, that absolute justice will be done him, that no evil thing can befall a good man. He goes forward with confidence, sick or well, rich or poor, and gets a great deal more comfort out of life than the man who has no religion.

I have found myself saying many times to people who have a chronic ailment, "You need religion as well as medicine. You need faith in an overruling providence that guides everything to wise ends; that the affliction of disease teaches a lesson that every one should strive to learn."

This does not mean that sick people are to sit down and trust that an overruling providence will do everything. Nothing of the sort. He is to use remedies guided by his best judgment, but in the use of them he can believe that all things will come out right. Any medicine has a better chance to cure a man who holds such a faith.

Some men are so faithless and unbelieving, so restless and desperate, their minds so unsettled, that even the best of medicine has little chance to do them any good. Therefore I say that religion is often quite as necessary as medicine; that the want of religion frequently defeats the action of the best medicine. Many a chronic invalid has languished in vain for a physical remedy simply because he has lost his grip on vital religion, the religion that not only provides salvation in the world to come, but soundness of body and mind in the world that is.

Yes, there is a most intimate relation between medicine and religion. Other things being equal, the irreligious man stands a poor chance of getting well when he is sick, while the religious man frequently gets well in the most astonishing way after the doctors have all given him up to die.

With a firm faith in a rational religion and an obedient use of the right remedy a great many hopeless invalids could be restored to perfect health.

Well, you have made it clear as to what you mean by religion. But what is the remedy you would recommend?

Of course I would recommend different remedies for different conditions. But the particular remedy that I am interested in at this time, the remedy that meets more chronic ailments than any other remedy I know of, is Peruna. Peruna is a remedy for that multitudinous group of ailments that are dependent upon catarrhal derangements.

I am furnishing a book on catarrhal diseases which I send to any person free. In this book I explain quite fully the uses of Peruna. Those who do not care to wait to send for the booklet at this time will find information and instruction as to the general uses of Peruna explained within the wrapper of each bottle.

Peruna, Man-a-Lin and La-cu-pin are manufactured by the Pe-ru-na Company, Columbus, Ohio. Sold at all drug stores.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Many persons inquire for The Old-Time Peruna. They want the Peruna that their Fathers and Mothers used to take. The old Peruna is now called Katarno. If your druggist or dealer does not keep it for sale write the Katarno Company, Columbus, Ohio, and they will tell you all about it.—Advertisement.

Three-ton chassis . . . 3,400
Two-ton chassis . . . 2,800

Packard trucks are sold on their proved ability to produce dividends. This result is accomplished by cutting delivery cost or by increasing business. We establish one or both these propositions before accepting your order. Packard salesmen are equipped to analyze your traffic requirements.

We are prepared to make prompt deliveries. We have a range of capacity that enables you to standardize your garage with Packard vehicles. Don't wait until winter conditions cripple your hauling.

Quantity purchases of Packard trucks by critical big buyers bear a close relation to worth as an investment. Repeating orders placed by Marshall Field and Company, American Express Company, Swift and Company, the National Cash Register Company and John Wanamaker, are evidence of satisfactory service.
